7. Please provide a brief explanation for your answer to question 6:

	Peru firmly rejects the imposition of unilateral economic measures that are used as instruments of political and economic coercion against developing countries. This type of action usually generates significant negative consequences, such as the disruption of local economies, the decrease in growth rates and the deterioration of the living conditions of the affected populations. In the current context, in which the international economic system faces multiple challenges, the adoption of unilateral measures can generate greater tensions, hinder compliance with multilateral commitments in the areas of financing, the environment and trade, among others, and delay collective efforts to achieve sustainable development. Strict respect for international law is therefore essential.
